- How can I recognise the symptoms of this disease?
Veronafiere recommends taking special precautions if you have spent time in an at-risk region in the past two weeks or have had contact with a person affected by 2019-nCoV.
Take additional care if symptoms appear such as: high temperature and respiratory tract problems. In this case it is advisable to contact your doctor.

We also recommend that you give advance notice of your visit to your doctor's surgery/hospital and mention that you have been in an affected region or in contact with a sick person and that you have similar symptoms (e.g. high temperature).

• What can I do if I find myself close to someone who is ill or in poor health?

Veronafiere recommends calling the Ministry of Health's emergency toll-free number 1500 to notify anyone suffering from acute respiratory difficulties, providing the operator with useful information if possible. For example, by mentioning whether the person has spent time in an at-risk region in the past two weeks or has been in contact with a confirmed case of 2019-nCoV.

Ask the person in question to sit down and avoid direct physical contact. Try to keep at a safe distance of 1 metre. Wait for the emergency services to arrive and take in hand any additional assistance services.

• Other useful information

- It is also advisable if you are assisting a patient or if you are a healthcare professional
- For the population at large, when no obvious symptoms are evident, using masks is not necessary
